When death do us part - no matter how, it is deeply affecting.
Death comes in various different forms – death by natural causes, suicide, illness, due to disasters/accidents/crimes, as well as in wars and conflicts.
However different the causes may be, death takes away our loved ones from us.

Death is something that happens to others.
Yet what had been sought after in their lifetime by the deceased continues to affect us – what emotions did they hold close to their heart, what made them live the way they did?
Every single person's life is a shared resource of humanity.
Its invaluable significance, whatever its nature, is impossible to measure by any means.
Our thoughts and feelings for the deceased and our predecessors are engrained within us, to continue to weave our history - becoming part of it.

Death liberates our emotions towards the deceased.
In the past recent months, those who are dear to me have passed away, one after another.
The moment it dawned on me that I will never see them again, their existence took root deep down within my heart.
I believe I am not the only one who has ever felt this way.

There is a Japanese Senryu poem that reads:
“we are all born alone, die alone, yet why can't we live alone?”
I still continue to wonder, question, and ponder - everyday.

I look forward to meeting you at the foot of Mt. Fuji.
